

AI Prompt and Content Pack

Reusable prompt library for "Tidewell", a fictional online store selling reusable home goods. Prepared by Prosync Solutions.

What is in the pack

Five prompts a small ecommerce team can reuse every week, each with fill-in variables (shown in `[brackets]`), an example output, and a note on why the prompt is built the way it is. They work in ChatGPT, Claude or Gemini.

#	Prompt	Use it for
1	Brand voice primer	Paste once at the start of a chat so everything after sounds like the brand
2	Product description	Product pages, marketplace listings
3	Social captions, three angles	Instagram, Facebook, TikTok
4	Customer support reply	Late order, damaged item, refund requests
5	Review and tighten	Quality check on any draft before it goes live

1. Brand voice primer

You are writing for `[BRAND]`, which sells `[WHAT IT SELLS]` to `[WHO BUYS IT]`.

Voice: `[3 ADJECTIVES]`. Write the way a knowledgeable friend talks, not the way an advert talks.

Rules:

- Short sentences. Plain words. No exclamation marks.
- Lead with what the customer gets, then the feature that delivers it.
- Never use: "game-changer", "elevate", "unleash", "must-have", "revolutionary".
- Do not invent facts, numbers, materials or certifications. If something is not in the details I give you, leave it out or ask me.

Reply "Ready" and wait for my next message.

Why it works: a banned-word list and a "do not invent facts" rule remove the two most common problems with AI copy: it sounds generic, and it makes things up.

2. Product description

Write a product description for [PRODUCT NAME].

Details (use only these):

[PASTE SPECS, MATERIALS, SIZES, CARE INSTRUCTIONS]

The buyer's main worry: [OBJECTION, e.g. "will it leak?"]

Format:

1. Headline, max 8 words, benefit first
2. One paragraph, 40 to 60 words
3. Four bullet points: benefit in bold, then the feature behind it
4. One line that answers the main worry

EXAMPLE OUTPUT

Lunch that stays where you packed it

The Tidewell Lunch Box keeps wet and dry apart, so the salad stays crisp and the dressing stays put. Stainless steel inside, a silicone seal around the lid, and nothing that needs replacing next year.

- No soggy sandwiches - removable divider makes two compartments
- Nothing to throw away - replaces cling film and zip bags
- Easy to clean - dishwasher safe, seal lifts out
- Fits a work bag - 19 × 14 × 6 cm, holds 900 ml

Leak test: fill it with water, close the four clips, turn it upside down. It holds.

Why it works: naming the buyer's worry forces the copy to deal with the real reason people hesitate, and the fixed format means every product page on the site matches.

3. Social captions, three angles

Write 3 captions for [PLATFORM] about [PRODUCT OR OFFER].

Each caption takes a different angle:

- A. A problem the customer recognises
- B. A small, specific moment of using it
- C. A plain fact or number

Each one: under [N] words, first line works on its own as a hook, ends with [CALL TO ACTION]. Up to 3 hashtags, lowercase. No emojis unless I ask.

EXAMPLE OUTPUT

A. The drawer of mismatched plastic lids. You know the one. One box, one lid, done. Link in bio.
#lunchprep #lesswaste

B. 12:40, desk, lid off. The salad is still cold and the dressing is still in its corner. Link in bio.
#worklunch #mealprep

C. One lunch box. Roughly 250 fewer zip bags a year if you pack lunch every workday. Link in bio. #reusable #lesswaste

Why it works: asking for three named angles gives real variety to test, instead of three versions of the same sentence.

4. Customer support reply

Draft a reply to this customer message:

[PASTE MESSAGE]

What happened on our side: [FACTS]

What we can offer: [REFUND / REPLACEMENT / DISCOUNT / NOTHING]

Structure:

1. Acknowledge the specific problem in one sentence. No "we apologise for any inconvenience".
2. Say what happened, plainly, without blaming a courier or a system.
3. Say exactly what we are doing and by when.
4. One line on what they need to do, if anything.

Under 110 words. Sign off as [AGENT NAME].

EXAMPLE OUTPUT

Hi Jordan,

Your lunch box arrived with a cracked clip, and that is not what you paid for. I'm sorry.

It left our warehouse without enough padding, which is on us. A replacement went out this morning by express and should reach you by Thursday. Tracking is on its way to your inbox.

You don't need to send the damaged one back. Recycle it or keep it for parts.

If Thursday comes and goes with no parcel, reply here and I'll refund you in full.

Sam, Tidewell Support

Why it works: the agent supplies the facts and the offer, so the model writes the wording and never decides policy.

5. Review and tighten

Review the draft below as a strict editor. Do not rewrite it yet.

List:

1. Any claim not supported by the details I gave you
2. Any sentence that could describe any brand (generic filler)
3. Any word from the banned list
4. Anything a customer might misread

Then give a tightened version that fixes only those points, and tell me the word count before and after.

Draft:

[PASTE DRAFT]

Why it works: separating "find the problems" from "fix them" gives a checklist a person can verify, which is where quality control actually happens.

How the pack is delivered

- Prompts in a shared doc or spreadsheet with the variables highlighted
- Brand voice primer filled in from the client's existing website and best-performing posts
- Two worked examples per prompt using the client's real products
- A short guide for staff: what to check by hand before anything is published

Sample project created to demonstrate process and style. Tidewell is a fictional brand and the product details are invented for the example.
